The ANSWER to the REMARKS on the Craftſman's Vindication conſider'd and confuted.

To the AUTHOR of the WEEKLY REGISTER.

SIR,

I Muſt take the Liberty to break in upon your uſual Cuſtom for once, by making Politicks the whole Subject of this Week's Entertainment: Every Man, who has any Regard for the Publick, or any Tenderneſs for his own private Character, will forgive me; the poiſonous Blaſt of Scandal and Diſaffection is gone forth among the People, and the brazen Serpent can't be exhibited too ſoon, for Prevention or Cure of the many Miſchiefs it was deſign'd to propagate.——I make no Apology for deferring the Continuation of my laſt; that was calculated to remove a lingring Diſeaſe, which allows Time and Opportunity to find out a Remedy; this is an Antidote to the Plague, and admits of no Delay, for fear the Rapidity of the Infection ſhould bid Defiance to Medicine.

Would any Perſon who reads this modeſt well-bred Anſwer to the Remarks, ever imagine it was written under the Influence, or in Oppoſition to the Power of an arbitrary Miniſter? Would any one ſurmiſe the Liberties of that People were in Danger, where ſuch Audaciouſneſs was tolerated, or that any Man would be ſo mad to provoke a Tyrant to deſtroy him? The Author of the Libel before us, has done his utmoſt Endeavour to paint the preſent Adminiſtration, with every Feature of Villany that could ever blacken the moſt abandon'd Reign, and yet I'll challenge the whole Records of Hiſtory, to produce the ſmalleſt Example of ſuch a Licence taken to effect it.——Among all the real Champions for Liberty againſt the moſt profligate Princes, among all the Catalines that have uſurp'd the Character, there never was an Inſtance of ſuch brutal Oppoſition, or ſuch avow'd Inſolence to ſupport it.——Nothing but the mildeſt Reign, and the moſt condeſcending Miniſtry could give Birth to ſuch Preſumption, and none but the moſt determin'd Enemies to both would dare to affront them in ſo groſs a Manner.——One would think they abus'd the Privileges of their Country with a Deſign that they ſhould be deſtroy'd, and indulg'd ſuch an unwarrantable Zeal for Liberty that it might loſe its Being.——I muſt again inſiſt on it, that were not this very Liberty allow'd us even to a Fault, this diſintereſted Advocate for another Man's Cauſe would never have dar'd to affront the Power, that ſcarce waited for Provocation to ruin him. The Behaviour of our Enemies themſelves is the ſtrongeſt Proof againſt them, and whoever is acquainted with their Writings now, or ſhould be in future Times (in Caſe they ſhould live ſo long) will be thoroughly convinc'd, that ſuch an abandon'd Licence was inconſiſtent with the Facts they aſſerted; and their Invectives againſt the Miniſtry were an Evidence in their Favour.——In private Life, who is it dares to queſtion another's Reputation, or charge his Neighbour with Crimes he can't prove? No wicked Man dares, and no honeſt Man would affront the Laws with ſuch a Behaviour; and yet in high Life, among the greateſt of Mankind, in Affairs that relate to the Welfare of whole Kingdoms, a little impertinent Scribler, hid in his own Obſcurity, ſhall preſume to intrude himſelf, and make an open Charge of corrupt Adminiſtration, againſt the Virtue that is above his Acquaintance; ſhall dare to prattle of miſapplying the publick Treaſure, ſhall venture to ſtile a great and noble Miniſter, wicked and weak, and brand him with the imaginary Ruin of the whole Nation.——For my Part I am aſtoniſh'd that ſuch contemptible Creatures ſhould offer to lift their Eyes ſo high, or dream of aſperſing Characters they have only ſeen at a Diſtance; that they ſhould have the Inſolence of making an Accuſation without Doors, contrary to all Law and Equity, which the greateſt and moſt implacable of the Faction have not preſum'd to think upon within; that all the Rules of Decency and Good Manners ſhould be ſo notoriouſly violated, and the moſt eminent Names made the Ridicule of the Vulgar.——I am aſtoniſh'd that ſuch flagrant Inſtances of Slander and Injuſtice ſhould be impos'd on us for Reaſon, and Virtue, or that any one Man of Probity or good Breeding ſhould be a Proſelyte to the Cauſe.——Nothing but the exceſſive Lenity of the Government can account for the firſt, as only Fickleneſs, and the Deſire of Change can be Motives for the laſt.——But however, the very Creature who has been raſh enough to accuſe this Miniſter, has been fooliſh enough to commence Champion for another, and has made his Praiſe a Libel, as well as his Satire; while he condemns the preſent Adminiſtration, he juſtifies a former, and his Approbation meets with as much Credit as his Cenſure; there the Advocate is fitted to the Cauſe, and, if he had confin'd his Wiſdom to that Vindication only, his Infamy and his Works would have died together.——But, as he has been imprudent enough to mention them in the ſame Page, and give the Preference, where even the Compariſon was a greater Honour than ever it deſerv'd, I ſhall be juſtified in taking this Notice of his Indiſcretion, and chaſtizing an Injury that reflected ſuch Diſhonour upon its Author.——Who, but himſelf, would have ever taken it into his Head to vindicate Meaſures, that have been univerſally and juſtly condemn'd? Who beſide would have condemn'd Meaſures, that have a Title to univerſal and honeſt Applauſe? Who but himſelf would have endeavour'd to palliate the moſt arbitrary Proceedings that ever were known in England ſince the Revolution? Who beſide would have inſinuated any Thing of that Nature in a Reign, that will always be remarkable for Clemency and Mercy? Who but himſelf would have proſtituted his Pen in the Cauſe of a Man abandon'd by all Parties, and deſpis'd by all? Who beſide would have vilified another, that deſerves the Confidence and eſteem of all Men?——But ſuch is the Spite and Malice of this little Inſect in Politicks, that, to affront the preſent Miniſtry, he will give a Sanction to the worſt that ever went before them; and rather than loſe a Victim to his Reſentment, he'll make Truth itſelf the Sacrifice.——'Twas Folly, as well as Inſolence, to ask why the Errors of former Adminiſtrations were mention'd again in this.——When a Man who had run thro' all the Intricacies of State Villany, and refin'd upon every one who had chang'd to all Sides, and had been faithful to neither; who had fled from Juſtice at home, and confeſs'd himſelf a Traitor abroad, when ſuch a one would aſſume the Character of a Patriot, 'tis high Time to pull off the Maſque indeed, and ſhew him to the World in his natural Complexion; this has been done moſt effectually in the Remarks; and, I may ſafely ſay, his own Indiſcretion was the firſt Hint for the Diſcovery: Neither was this Diſcovery made, as is falſly pretended, to divert the publick Attention from any Thing that is tranſacting now; every Body knows that the preſent Miniſters deſpiſe ſuch Artifices, and have ſtood with Intrepidity the ſevereſt Scrutinies, that Ambition or Revenge could make for their Deſtruction; nor have the ſevereſt Scrutinies been wanting to put them to the Tryal, yet they ſtand the Teſt, and, like Gold, refine in the Operation.——I paſs over a Deal of idle Sophiſtry in this petulant Libel, becauſe 'tis too trifling to deſerve an Anſwer; but as the ſecret Tranſactions of a certain Cloſet are made the publick Entertainment, it mayn't be amiſs to take ſome Notice of ſuch extraordinary Intelligence, or glance on the Character of a Perſon, who would condeſcend to make Uſe of ſuch little Stratagems, to glean up the Seeds of Miſchief, and once more ſcatter them abroad, that the Harveſt might yield a ſuitable Increaſe.——The whole of this remarkable Paragraph is certainly one of the moſt unjuſt and abuſive Accuſations that ever was made publick.——In the firſt Place, but two Perſons are ſuppos'd in theſe Cloſet Converſations, and 'tis to be preſum'd neither of them would betray the Secrets of the Place, and, if any one elſe has fraudulently made a third, I am confident he would not dare to confeſs it even to a Brother, for fear he ſhould ſtab him for his Inſolence.——'Tis plain then this is only a Piece of that bad Imagination, which has invented Facts ſo frequently to anſwer the worſt Ends, with this additional Aggravation, that he has foiſted his mean Slanders on a Perſonage too ſacred to be nam'd on ſuch an Occaſion, and deſcrib'd him in ſuch a Manner as I am certain is perfectly unworthy of his Character, and conſequently the LIE muſt reſt with the mean and contemptible Author of ſo improbable a Scandal.——Yet were it poſſible for ſuch a Rumour to take Place, and become the Tattle of a Day, what Kind of Creature is he who takes Advantage of ſuch Ignes fatui to lead the Publick aſtray? A Man who had a ſtrict Regard for Truth, and wrote only for its Sake, would be aſham'd of ſuch wretched Reſources for Argument, and deſpiſe the Cauſe that could furniſh him with no better.——But this very buſy Advocate for this very great Patriot finds his Account in theſe pretty Tales ſo well, that he has made you a whole Collection of them, and right-worthy are they of the Author. We are told he is unwilling to introduce ſecret Hiſtory or betray Converſations; but, nevertheleſs, as 'twill entertain the Reader, and flatter the Iniquity of his own Heart, there is a whole String of them at his Service, all as improbable and romantic as the Legenda Aurea, or the Perſian Tales——I ſhould really be half aſham'd to attempt to confute them, for fear I ſhould be univerſally condem'd for once imagining the Author himſelf had a Hope to be believ'd.——Indeed one of theſe ingenious Fictions is too remarkable to eſcape unobſerv'd; 'tis affirm'd, that the Hero of this Piece was always zealouſly attach'd to the Proteſtant Succeſſion in the preſent Royal Family, and ſtill continues ſo, in ſuch a remarkable Manner, that, if his own Endeavours to alienate the Affections of the People from them, ſhould be ever likely to ſucceed, he would himſelf ſacrifice his Life and Fortune in their Defence, and pull down the Babel he had rais'd.——'Tis certain then he thinks himſelf an Almanzor in Politicks, and that his ſingle Intereſt is ſufficient to keep the Balance of Controverſy even.——I come now to a more ſerious Part of this extraordinary Craftſman, an avow'd Conſpiracy againſt a great Man's Life, and a public Ratification of the bloody Vow, which the cunning Gentleman before us attempts ſo awkwardly to excuſe: It has now indeed receiv'd the Addition of Numbers to make it the more formidable, and is publiſh'd to all without Doors, which before was made only Viva voce within; I am glad the Maſque is taken off ſo effectually, and that the People are made ſo particularly the Judges of the whole Affair. Whatever Gloſs may be put upon it, I don't in the leaſt queſtion but they'll eſteem it as they ought, the only End theſe Patriots had in View, and the true Motive of their virtuous Oppoſition.——But can any Age, or Nation, produce a Parallel to this ſurprizing Confeſſion? Will any Annals of Time afford any Circumſtance like it? or can any Criſis of Affairs excuſe it? Is this the Reward of long Service, and approv'd Fidelity? Is this the only Equivalent for continued Toil, and unwearied Induſtry? Is this the Treatment that is due to Loyalty and Virtue? I own myſelf amaz'd at the Declaration, and, if Reſentment had not infatuated our Author's Underſtanding, he had never made it.——Let the People of Britain examine it to its firſt Principles, and aſk themſelves if it can proceed from real Patriotiſm; let them regard the Characters that compoſe this formidable Aſſociation, and think if 'tis likely it ſhould. Let them conſider the ſuperior Services of him they are leagu'd to deſtroy, and judge if he deſerves ſo tragical a Fate; let them recollect the frequent Accuſations of his Enemies, with Regard to the Abuſe of Power, or the Infringment of Liberty, and determine if this Boldneſs of theirs is conſiſtent with either; if he was cruel in the Exerciſe of his Power, how dare they provoke him? if he is otherwiſe, why do they abuſe him? Let them look back, and ſee if ever Miniſter receiv'd ſuch an Affront as this whole Letter before, and if ever Miniſter deſerv'd it leſs.—— Let them be faithful in their Enquiry, and juſt in their Determination, and the Great Man, who has ſo long been the Mark of Envy and Reſentment, will appear as worthy of their Affection, as the Favour of his Prince, and that 'tis his Merit and his Succeſs only that have render'd him obnoxious to the Inſults of his Enemies.——Has he done any Thing to violate any Part of the Conſtitution, or without the Approbation of Parliament? The Parliament itſelf is fitteſt to take Cognizance of the Neglect, and do itſelf Juſtice: Yet there he annually appears with Safety and Honour; ſome of his greateſt Enemies are ſuppos'd to be Members too, and yet they are ſilent, where they have both Power and Privilege, and ſuffer this great Delinquent to eſcape with Impunity. If he is really guilty, why don't they accuſe him where the Nation may have Vengeance? If he is innocent, why do they report him otherwiſe? If he is guilty, they are but Demi-Patriots at beſt, and have not Courage to act up to their Principles; if he is innocent, they have labour'd to do him ſuch Injuries as nothing but his Virtue could overcome.——In Parliament, Seſſion after Seſſion paſſes away, and no Attempt is made againſt him; out of Parliament, not a Week eſcapes without ſome infamous Libel that ſtabs in the Dark, and leaves no Opportunity to diſcover the Aſſaſſin.——Every ſuch Libel is a Reproach to the Parliament if true, if falſe, an Inſult to the Miniſter that nothing can pardon——If we regard the preſent, who is the Perſon that makes theſe ſurprizing Diſcoveries of private Converſations, and is ſo fully convinc'd of the Miniſter's Guilt he would deſtroy? If he is a Member, why does he exchange his Privilege in Parliament, for the Licence of a Hackney Railer; if he is not, let him come forward to the Light, and tell us his real Motive for ſo vile a Slander, that we may know what accidental Neglect or imaginary Injury inliſted him one of the modern Patriots.

To the Account we publish'd of the said Affair in our Paper of Saturday last, we have to add, that some of the Spaniards on board the Guarda Costa, were far from approving of the Barbarity of their Comrades, and were against taking any Thing from on board the Rebecca, saying, that their superior Officers abused their Commission. This, with Capt. Jenkins being certain of their coming out of the Havanna, leaves no room to doubt their Sloop's being commission'd. Among the Money and Goods they took from on board the Rebecca, was a Box of Tortoise-shell and Old Wrought Silver.

Dublin, June 12. This Day was executed at St. Stephen's Green, James Murphey, alias Monaghan, alias Poor Caif, for the Murder of his Wife in July last. Pursuant to a former Resolution, the common Hangman rode to the Execution in a Suit of flower'd Fustian, presented him by the Master-Weavers, and in which he really look'd as genteel as many of our Hatchet-Face Beaux in the like Dress: This Proceeding had for the present good Success, few appearing in Mr. Kelly's Livery, and some who did, as one in High-street, whom he openly saluted by the affectionate Name of Brother, we hear, very narrowly escaped being mobb'd. There is a Design on foot to expose our Dames who shine in Foreign Silks and Callico's, in some such publick Manner, and seemingly with good Reason; our Manufacturers labouring under the most pressing Necessities from the great Consumption of those Commodities. The Hangman after the Execution, made a Tour to the Coomb, with his bloody Cleaver, &c. to the wonderful Emolument of the Inhabitants, who follow'd him in vast Crowds, with loud Huzza's.
